BULLETIN

Kansas City, Mo., June 26—(AP)—Early this afternoon no bodies had been recovered from the ruins of the Gillis Theater building, destroyed by an explosion and resulting fire last night. The search was delayed while firemen pulled down standing walls that were a constant menace.

Fire Chief Alex Henderson expressed the belief that not more than three persons lost their lives after he had checked all reports.

Kansas City, Mo., June 26—(AP)—After a noon survey of the ruins of the Gillis Theater destroyed by explosion and fire here last night, Fire Chief Henderson said today he believed not more than six or eight bodies would be found in the ruins, and perhaps not that many.

Persons who escaped from the theater said that not more than twenty persons were in the show house when the blast occurred.

Up to noon today such search as the workers were able to make in the smoking ruins had revealed no bodies.

Blast in Drug Store.
That the explosion was caused by a gas explosion in a drug store in the Gillis Theater building was the belief expressed by fire department officials.

The front door of the drug store, splintered, was found hanging on a projection above the stairs in the city market across the street.

A toy pistol and a box of face powder which had been in the drug store, were found on Fourth Street, evidently blown entirely over the market house. Other articles from the drug store were scattered on the market roof.

Kansas City, Mo., June 26—(AP)—An unknown number of persons were killed and scores were injured when an explosion followed by fire destroyed the Gillis Theater, a burlesque house, here last night when an audience was viewing a motion picture film.

This morning, hours after the destruction of the five story theater building, no definite estimate of the number of dead could be made, although police and fire department officials said they believed from 30 to 35 of the hundred or more persons in the theater and restaurants and stores of the building had been trapped in the debris.

Search Ruins for Bodies.
Early today firemen had organized a volunteer party of 100 men to search the smoldering wreckage for bodies.

They predicted it would take many hours of digging before an accurate appraisal of the casualties could be made.

A fireman, John Hagan, was killed on his way to the scene when a five truck overturned. Two other firemen were injured.

The explosion occurred at 11 o'clock. Flames enveloped the structure almost immediately and the roof and the floors of the building, constructed forty two years ago as the city's finest playhouse, collapsed.

Those who were able to make their way out of the building did so miraculously, according to eye witnesses.

Few Exits From Theater.
Exits of the theater, located on the second floor, were few. There was the main entrance and a rear exit behind the stage. Both led down a confusing arrangement of hallways and stairs of wood, which crumbled in a moment under the falling building.

Two youths who got to the stairway behind stage were hurled through the air, but succeeded in grasping a rafter and found themselves suspended over the alley. They dropped on a fireman below, who broke their fall.

Stories gathered from survivors indicated the front exit must have been cut off by the collapse of the theater floor, but none of those who reached safety by that avenue could tell clearly how he got out.

Bleeding and torn, men were seen running from the building, and some were dragged out of the debris.

Thought Thirty Killed.

FATAL ELEVATED
WRECK IN CITY
THIS AFTERNOONOne Man Killed, Some Passengers Injured
in Collision

Chicago, June 26—(AP)—One man, an employe, was killed, and a number of passengers were injured in a rear-end collision of two elevated trains on the south side line of the Chicago Rapid Transit Company near the 35th Street station.

The man killed was Pierce Moore. At least five other persons were severely injured, and a number of others were bruised and cut in the crash.

An empty train crashed into a northbound Howard Avenue express train and one of the coaches was thrown from the rails but remained on the elevated structure.

The forward train was a baseball special express which would ordinarily not stop at 35th street. Presumably the motorman of the second train of empty coaches believed the train ahead was running express and crashed into the special. The rear train suffered most damage.

Trouble Detector Given Democraton by I. N. U.

Line foremen of all of the districts of the Illinois Northern Utilities company are in Dixon today observing the operation of a new trouble-detecting device which is a recent invention of one of the foremen, A. McCright, of the Alton branch. Tests were being conducted this afternoon along the high tension line system north of Dixon.

The device is placed on a long pole which is hooked over the high tension lines and equipped with a pair of head phones. Defective insulators and other leaks are easily detected by this piece of equipment which has been given thorough tests by experts in the Dixon offices. The tests are made without turning off the current on the high tension lines and it is believed to be a very successful device which will prove a time saver and positive in its operation. The tests today are being conducted by Charles Finley, system operator of the company of this city.

Carlstrom Decides Fate of Slayers?

COLONY WARDS
WILL BE SENT
TO AN ASYLUMLee County to be Saved
Expense of Murder
Trials, Report

Disposition of Walter Smith and Michael Makinowicz, now being held in the Lee County jail for the murder of George Spader at the Dixon state hospital early in the spring for a trifling sum of money, is believed to have been settled and in such a manner that Lee County will not be put to the expense of financing a murder trial at the September term of the circuit court. It was reported this afternoon that Attorney General Oscar Carlstrom had thoroughly investigated the records and history of the case and would soon hand down a decision to be submitted to State's Attorney Mark C. Keller.

It is believed that Walter Smith will be taken from the county jail direct to the state institution for criminally insane, Chester. Makinowicz, who has confessed to his complicity in the murder, which was one of the most cowardly in the history of the county, will doubtless remain in the jail until the September grand jury convenes.

To Indict Makinowicz.

Should he be indicted for the crime, it is said that the case may be certified to the county court, where he may be declared insane and then be committed to the Chester institution, thus saving the taxpayers of Lee county several thousand dollars which would doubtless be required to prosecute the murder trial.

State's Attorney Mark C. Keller is out of the city on his annual vacation, but it was reported this afternoon that the opinion of the attorney general has been received here and is in readiness to be submitted to the county prosecutor upon his return, when, doubtless, immediate action will be taken.

Mystery in Red Rain

Human blood is found in Samuel Honeybun's rain-gauge.

Sir Francis Lathrop's lifeless body is discovered in the rear of the Lathrop home five miles distant on the same day.

Honeybun and Lathrop were not known to be even acquainted with each other.

And added to that is the fact that Honeybun is a quiet peace-loving, respected citizen. He likes to see justice done, and wishes to uphold the law.

He immediately notifies the police of the gruesome find in his rain gauge, and orders the blood analyzed.

Meanwhile suspicion has been directed toward Sir Guy Lathrop. Sir Guy had planned to marry Sir Francis Lathrop's daughter against her father's wish.

Who killed Sir Francis Lathrop? This is the question, and why was blood placed in Samuel Honeybun's rain-gauge?

It is a mystery that bafles the best men of Scotland Yard.

On through chapter after chapter the story runs.

Be sure you get your paper Saturday and start in with the first chapter, of this greatest detective story of the year.

CAL CONTINUES
MEETINGS WITH NEWSPAPER MEN

Seward Scott, Mass., June 26—(AP)—President Coolidge is finding the rest he expected when he left Washington for a summer vacation.

Secluded in a pretentious house on the coast, he has learned after two days stay that residents of the north shore realize that he came to Massachusetts for relaxation and few requests are being made for the privilege of calling on him at White Court.

Mayor Quinn of Cambridge, Mass., was awarded the honor today of being the first to have a conference with the President, his call being arranged to discuss plans for the reception of Mr. Coolidge when he goes to Cambridge, July 3 for an address.

Mayor Quinn's visit was the only one on the President's engagement list for the day, although he had arranged to continue the practice, beginning this afternoon, of holding semi-weekly conferences with newspaper men.

Mr. Coolidge is still undecided whether he will go to Poland Springs, Maine, next week to participate in the conference of governors. If he does not, it is believed the governors will come to White Court to be received by him.

Mr. and Mrs. Ted Finkler and three children will arrive this evening from Oakland, Calif., to spend the summer with his mother, Mrs. Jennie Finkler, both of Peoria.

LICENSED TO WED.
A marriage license was issued late yesterday afternoon to Leon E. Wagner and Miss Mildred L. Donelson, both of Peoria.

Taxi Near Plunge Into
Illinois River Today

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Peoria, Ill., June 26—A taxicab, with its driver and a young woman passenger, narrowly averted a dive into the Illinois river here at 2:40 o'clock this morning when it crashed through the closed gates of the lower free bridge which was open for a boat to pass, in the face of danger signals, and hung tilted in a precarious position, its front wheels hanging downward on the end of the raised draw and its rear wheels holding fast to the fixed part of the bridge.

Until the closing of the draws righted it. But for the quick manipulation of the brakes by the driver, the car most certainly would have been hurled down into the hole, 30 feet below, left by the raising draw, and into river, according to John Enfield, bridge superintendent. Great care was taken in lowering the draw for fear of dislodging the car. The taxicab was Bloomington bound. It was stated, records showing its license number was issued to T. W. Hill, 301 South Morris Ave., Bloomington, Ill.

Riverview Garage Installs
Auto Washing Device

The Riverview Garage has just installed a new device for the washing of automobiles which is an interesting piece of mechanism. It is called the Velvet Spray washer and by means of a motor driven air pump it supplies a high pressure stream for the washing of the running gear and the under regions of the machine that are ordinarily so hard to reach. The machine also produces a spray of velvet softness for use on the car bodies, effectively washing without damage to the finish of the car.

CROWE TAKES WHOLE DAY
JURY ADDRESSAccused Defense Attorneys of Trying to Make Case Joke

Chicago, June 26—(AP)—The greatest crowd of the six weeks of the trial fought for admission to the court room today to hear Robert E. Crowe, state's attorney, make the closing jury plea in the Shepherd trial.

He led with a denunciation of William Scott Stewart and W. W. O'Brien the defense attorneys, for their spirit of levity throughout the trial.

He defended himself, Judge Harry Olson and Alexander F. Reichmann from the defense's allegation that the accusation against Shepherd and his trial were steps in a vicious conspiracy against Shepherd to prevent him inheriting the $1,000,000 estate willed to him by the boy he is charged with using typhoid germs to slay.

"I am here because it is my sacred duty to be here," Crowe shouted as warned to his task. "They have introduced a new kind of murder here, and because of that it is the most important murder trial in the history of Illinois."

Stewart and O'Brien were on their feet with a half dozen objections as Prosecutor Crowe talked, and O'Brien made numerous sarcastic comments from his seat.

Hits "Hired Claqueurs."
"They wanted to laugh this case out of court," Crowe forced between

State's Attorneys
Can't See Chance
of Darl's Winning

Chicago, June 26—(AP)—None on the state's attorney's staff would entertain consideration today of W. D. Shepherd's acquittal, but it was indicated that if the present trial does not result in conviction Shepherd probably never will be forced to trial for either of two other deaths in connection with which he has been accused of murder.

Judge Harry Olson openly accused Shepherd of the murder of Mrs. Emma Nelson McClintock and of Dr. Oscar Olson. The same coroner's jury which recommended Shepherd be held for Billy's murder, recommended that Shepherd be indicted for Mrs. McClintock's murder. The death of Dr. Olson was recommended left open for investigation.

"This was our best case," said a member of the state's attorney's staff. "We are confident of conviction in it. If, however, we had cases in the other instances we thought we could obtain convictions upon, we would have had indictments already."

clenched teeth. "They wanted to call it a comedy, make a burlesque of it, have laughter from their hired claqueurs they brought here."

Crowe said the reason he put Judge Olson on the witness stand was to give Stewart and O'Brien an opportunity to make good their jury-choosing statement that "we will show this case is a frameup; Harry Olson has a financial interest in it."

The prosecutor criticized Shepherd for living sixteen years as a millionaire in a fashionable suburb, practicing law and not having a host of influential friends to rush to his rescue, and for waiting until the last moment to deny the charges against him.

The defense objected that by insinuating that Shepherd should have called character witnesses the prosecutor was committing a reversible error.

Called Shepherd "Liar."
Mr. Crowe dilated upon his charge that Shepherd was a shiftless "panhandler" who had been content to live sixteen years in plenty provided by another.

"My only purpose in cross examining this man was to prove he was a liar," Prosecutor Crowe told the jury as he pointed a finger at Shepherd.

Shepherd was doubly caught, Crowe showed, when he took the witness stand and denied he murdered Billy McClintock, but did not deny the conversations state witnesses said they had with him.

"Stewart wanted me to ask him for details. I am not Shepherd's lawyer. Why did he not have Shepherd deny them?"

Crowe held the defense tactics of Stewart and O'Brien responsible for the difficulty in controlling the Chicago crime situation.

Mrs. Julia Shepherd, wife of the defendant, was not in the court room this morning. She cried when Mr. Crowe's first assistant, George E. Gorman was making the state's opening plea and did not return for the afternoon session while Gorman was talking.

THE FIRST BLUE BIRD.
Just rain and snow—and rain again, and drizzle! drip! and blow! Then snow! and thaw! and slush! And then—
Some more rain and snow!
This morning I was most afeared
To wake up—when, I jing!
I seen the sun shine out and heard
The first bluebird of Spring!
Mother she'd raised the window some—

And in across the orchard come,
Soft as an angel's wing,
A breezy, treasy, beesy hum,
Too sweet for anything!
The winter's shroud was rent apart,
The sun burst forth in glee—
And when that bluebird sung, my heart
Hopped out of bed with me!

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS.
To Discourage Moths.
Wrap your woolen garments in newspapers putting moth balls in the folds, and pack away for the summer in covered boxes. Moths' ink is very obnoxious to moths.

Those Rust Stains.
Remove iron rust stains by wetting them with lemon juice and salt and letting them dry in the sunshine.

Try An Oil Rub.
If a black straw hat has become dusty and gray, brush it thoroughly with a piece of flannel that has been slightly oiled with vaseline.

A New Complexion.
Colored straw hats that have faded may be made like new by coloring with an oil paint thinned to the right shade and made the consistency of gasoline.

Bride of Morrow Honored at Party

Miss Mildred Lindsey entertained Thursday evening with a four-course dinner in honor of her sister, Miss Ines Lindsey, who is to become the bride of Francis Gorman tomorrow. The house was decorated with American Beauty roses and white lilies, the dining room having a white canopy, the center of which was a large white bell. When opening the gifts, the bride-to-be found many beautiful articles. The eighteen guests present left at a late hour, all voting the evening an enjoyable one, and wishing Miss Lindsey a long and happy future.

Swanson of Washington and Richmond, Va.; Mrs. Elliot Wadsworth of Washington and Boston, and Mrs. Horace Bee, Washington, wife of the consul general in London.

One thousand guests attended last night's court. King George wore the informal blue uniform of the royal horse guards and Queen Mary a gown of pure gold brocade with a pale blue train.

CYNTHIA GREY SAYS: WHEN YOU GO TO A MOVIE.

Perhaps tonight when dishes are done, you're going with your family to the movies.

But you're not wildly excited about it, are you? Of course not.

And yet, if you stop to think about it, it's the most royal entertainment this world has ever seen—the motion picture.

For there's everything in it that has amused kings and queens for centuries—races, bull fights, ballets, as well as more serious things.

It shows the whole world to us—from New York City to the unprofitable but romantic isles of the sea. And it takes us back into history, to watch Madame Pompadour persuade Louis XV of France to do as she wished him to do, or watch Moses explain the Ten Commandments to those who followed him.

Let's go to see Pola Negri tonight," the children of the family suggest.

But "Pola Negri" or "Blanche Sweet" aren't the stars of the picture. The picture, itself, with its throw-back into past centuries is the thing worth seeing!

The person who goes to the movies to be amused or to see a great star flicker her lashes or drop a tear into her handkerchief isn't getting one-tenth of the interest from the silver sheet that it there, waiting to be found.

Teach your children that one of the most instructive things in the world is the common everyday "movie." For it is. It's art and poetry, history and drama.

It gives us, even at its worst, a cross-section of life as it is being lived—or has been lived—somewhere. And as George Meredith wrote:

"Life is worthy of the Muse."

Girl Scouts in Camp, Tell Doings of Interest There

Tuesday, June 23

The whistle blew at six thirty this morning as usual. Not many took the dip because of the water being too cold. As seven thirty we had personal inspection and colors. Miss Sell led the way to breakfast singing "Follow, Follow Me." Several people did not recognize fried mush at breakfast.

Dishwashers, servers and those on kitchen duty prepared the "nosebags" for those who went on the hike to the Pines. Everybody who went on the hike were full of pep, but when they returned their pep had ebbed away.

The hikers walked across fields until they hit the road. Miss Sell decided when they were about two miles from the Pines to eat and then return to camp.

When the hikers returned to camp they were nearly dead. Krug was watching for them with field glasses. Rest hour was half past two to day on account of the hikers.

The visitors during rest hour informed us that it was time to get up. At four o'clock the non-swimmers went in and at four thirty the swimmers went in.

Retreat was a five thirty. Supper was served at five forty five.

The visitors today were Mr. and Mrs. Hunt and Barbara Lou Hunt, Mr. and Mrs. Rhodes, Miss Beach, Mrs. Wright and Miss Clark, Mrs. Holderman, Mrs. Smith, Mr. Andrews and Casey's people with others.

News Notes.

Early this morning "Sparrows" the dog made a visit to the sleeping tent and licked two girls faces.

Myra Alice Warner did not go on the hike because of sore feet. Several others did not go also.

The hikers returned to camp hot and sunburned. They have used lotions and creams galore. Are there any suggestions about how to keep from getting sunburned?

The hikers returned to camp hot and then removed their shoes and stockings.

The new "sheik" hair combing style did not agree with Harriet Utley. She has now returned to the old style. Cold cream and mentholatum are aids to keeping hair and sideburns smooth.

Miss Sell took her first swim today.

FABLES ON HEALTH

Fleas are a common pest. They live on dogs, cats, rats, hogs and human beings.

In addition to the uncomfortable-ness produced by their bites, these are danger of infection. Bubonic plague is carried by fleas.

To banish fleas spray the infested places with the following preparation:

Put two ounces of oil of bay and four ounces of ether into a bottle. Into another bottle pour 15 ounces of alcohol and four ounces of oil of eucalyptus.

Let these stand for two hours, shaking occasionally, then strain through a piece of cheesecloth into a large bottle. Use this with an atomizer, spraying the localities in the room where the fleas are.

Clean the room with carbolic acid water, injecting it into the cracks and ledges, and sweeping the floor or carpet with it, and wiping everything with a sponge wrung out of carbolic water.

A thorough treatment of the room with naptha, taking the carpets and upholstered furniture out of doors and saturating them with naptha, will get rid of fleas.

Sometimes a thorough sweeping dusting and airing are all that is required to rid a room of these pests.

TARIFF COMMISSIONS.

For fifty years this nation has at times periodical been led to believe that a tariff commission would solve the tariff problems scientifically and without political considerations. For fifty years, or as often as the experiment has been tried, the commission has been like a fifth wheel to the wagon.

If the commission as it now exists has given attention to any except the sugar schedules, it has not come to public notice generally. Anyhow, what happened in the sugar case is typical of progress made by the commissions.

The reason this manner of handling tariff schedules has failed up to this time probably is because an effort has been made to take the tariff out of politics. Principal differences of the two leading political parties are founded upon the tariff. That fact appears to be the block upon which the tariff commission has stumbled each time it has been organized. When the plan first was attempted the congress refused to confer upon any other body or person the power to alter tariff schedules. The work of the commission went for naught.

During the Taft administration there was much opposition to the Payne-Aldrich tariff, and a tariff commission scheme was evolved. President Taft, a protectionist, was generous in bestowing places on this commission, and in selecting economists from colleges, he gave to the free traders the best of the bargain.

That availed them nothing, however, as the upheaval in politics came before the commission was able to put the tariff on a scientific basis. The tariff for revenue only, according to democratic theories, was put into effect, without any commission appendage.

When the Fordney-McCumber law was passed by the republicans in the Harding administration, it was realized that deflation and other after-war conditions were likely to affect conditions to such an extent that changes in duties might be advisable from time to time without affecting the general tariff structure. To meet that condition provision was made that the president might make such changes, and he was given a tariff commission to ascertain the facts and to make recommendations.

The investigation and recommendations concerning the sugar tariff are the outstanding work of that commission, which is divided evenly between protectionists and free traders. There are six members of the commission, one of whom did not participate in the proceedings. The two protectionists were opposed to undermining protection of the domestic sugar interests, but the other three recommended reduction in duties.

President Coolidge adopted the view of the protectionists and agreed that there should be no alteration of sugar schedules. He said destruction of the domestic industry would leave the country at the mercy of outside combinations in restraint of trade, if such organizations were effected.

The fault in the construction of tariff commissions thus far has been in the theory that a nonpartisan commission will reach more scientific conclusions than will a partisan commission. The result is likely to be a sort of a deadlock such as has happened in the case of sugar.

If the country has declared for a protective tariff, and believes in it, as a majority of the people of this nation do believe in it, the revision should not be along lines of thought of a free trader. Let the protectionists take the authority along with the responsibility. If the nation declares for a tariff for revenue only, the free trade wing should be given both the power and the responsibility. In that manner there would be a definite policy, and the party in power would be responsible for it. What the people of this nation like is fixed responsibility, not "passing of the buck."

PULLING THEM TOGETHER.

Now comes the National Democrat, a new publication with offices at Washington, D. C. It appears to be more or less an official publication of the democratic party. One of the editors is William D. Jamieson, who, early in his career as a publisher, owned the Gazette at Columbus Junction, Iowa. Since early in the Wilson administration he has been attached to the democratic national committee in various capacities. One of his chief tasks was separating postmasters and other appointees from cash for campaign purposes.

Hard as that job may have been, Jamieson has tackled a harder one. He is trying to make the wings of the party flap in unison. This he has to say:

"John W. Davis may be a big lawyer but he's a democrat. Gov. Al Smith may be against the Volstead act but he's a great governor and a democrat. William Jennings Bryan may be a fundamentalist, Oscar Underwood may be against the klan, and McAdoo may be dry, but they're all democrats. "Jim Reed and Carter Glass may not agree on the league, but they're both democrats. So on down the line, and I'm for all of them. As democrats let's do what Chris Schurr said to me yesterday: "Take a lesson from the New York convention and quit hating each other." Let's get together. It's time."

WEATHER.

Weather experts are on the threshold of new discoveries in the domain of forecasting, predicts Marvin. He's head weatherman for Uncle Sam.

The main obstacle is that weather involves so much of the unexpected, and that's something no one can anticipate. The human animal has to rely largely on precedent.

Watch a "gang" of small boys who are real friends. They spend part of the time pounding each other, part of it calling each other names, part of it seriously fighting the other gang, and the rest in playing fighting games.

Thus their friendship grows, until it becomes a precious thing, to be treasured through all the long memories of non-combative manhood and old age.

Pick up your liard, the greatest monument of the childhood of the world. It is an epic of fighting men who never grew up.

There are miniature liards in every backyard, and building Odysseys in every trip to the old swimming hole. Scientists have been following with great success the method first recommended by the village idiot, in the old story.

ADVENTURES OF THE TWINS

by Olive Roberts Barton

NO. 23—A PAIR OF OLD SHOES

She sat patiently for two hours while the shoes were being repaired.

"I shall tell you the story of a pair of old shoes," said Mi O' Mi, the Story Teller, to the Twins.
"Were they magic?" asked Nick.
"You may decide for yourselves," said Mi O' Mi.

"Once upon a time there were two children who lived with their father in a big city.

"Mr. Emerson had once been a soldier and a gentleman, but some way or other he had forgotten that he had ever been a person of importance. He got discouraged after his wife died and he would not work—his clothes got ragged and soiled and he made no attempt whatever to keep himself shaved and neat.

"Mary did what she could at keeping the place clean, and even Jimmy helped with the washing and ironing and cleaning and cooking—when there was food in the house.

"But often there was no food at all, and at last two ladies came and took the children away. Each was to have a child to clothe and feed and care for, and in return Mary and Jimmy were to help as much as they could with small duties about the house.

"But Mary worried and worried 'I wonder how Father is getting along,' she would say to herself. 'I wonder if he needs me.' And then, after a few days, she decided to go back.

"It happened that on that day she was helping Mrs. Hornaby to clean out cupboards, and there was an old pair of shoes of Mr. Hornaby's to be thrown out.

"'I'll give them to the rag-man next time he comes,' said Mrs. Hornaby.

"Mary picked the shoes up. 'Why they aren't worn out!' she said. 'They only need new soles and a little patch on the side. They are quite splendid!'

tactics on the cotton boll weevil.

They found that weevil larvae would leave the most tempting foods and make in the direction of cotton bolls, at distances too great for any sense but smell.

The scientists could smell nothing themselves, but they distilled the bolls, to concentrate their odoriferous essences. They found a mixture of several, separated these and tried each on sample weevils. The most attractive turned out to be one that can be produced cheaply, from sugar beet waste.

So now, having found out what a weevil likes, they are going to use it as bait to entice him into traps or poison.

Science, once more, is simply common sense, applied with systematic exactness.

ARE TWO KINDS OF EDUCATION NEAR?

There is danger of developing two sorts of American college educations, differing less in education than in prestige and "selectness."

The old endowed colleges, on account of limited funds, have been compelled to limit the number of students.

The newer state universities, being supported by the taxes of the very people whose sons and daughters are clamoring for admission, have felt obligated to accept all qualified "And indeed they were so much better than the shoes she had ever seen her father wear, that it was no wonder she felt so.

"So when she told Mrs. Hornaby that she couldn't stay, but would have to go home, she added, 'May I take the shoes along, if you please?'

"'Certainly,' said the good lady. 'And here are two dollars for a present because you have been so good and worked so hard to please me. If you ever want a home, come back, my dear.'

"Mary stopped at a shoemaker's on the way home. She sat patiently for two hours while the shoes were being repaired. Then she took them to a boot-black's and had them shined. It took nearly all of her money.

"Then she took the shoes home to her father."

"What happened then?" asked Nancy.
"Mr. Emerson put the shoes on," said Mi O' Mi, "and some way they reminded him of the days when he had been a gentleman and had a good home and clothes and everything comfortable. The next thing he did was to go to an old bureau and fish out a clean collar. Then he shaved."

"I feel like my old self some way, Mary," he said. 'I'm going out and look for work!'

"And did he get it?" asked Nick.

"Sure, he did," said Mi O' Mi. "And a happier family never lived. Jimmy came back and Mr. Emerson was able after a while to rent a little home with a porch and garden. He never got discouraged after that, but kept right on. Now what do you think of the shoes? Were they magic?"

"Maybe," said Nancy. "But I think it was Mary who did it all!"

comers, and to call on these taxpayers for the necessary funds.

The result is that the older institutions have been compelled to select, on other grounds, even among the educationally qualified.

Their diplomas will, therefore, be taken as certifying to the selection, while the diplomas of the public universities will certify only to education.

Quite as many exceptional persons will doubtless graduate from the one as the other, and the grounds of academic selection may not indicate the best qualified for anything else.

But the burden of proof will attach to the holder of the more democratic diploma, while a certain presumption will go with the diploma of the Institution of limited attendance. It is an unfortunate, but perhaps unavoidable tendency.

NOTE FROM LESLIE PRESCOTT TO KARL WHITNEY

Dear Karl:

I received your letter this morning. Poor little Zoe died here in my home over a week ago. She never regained her senses after we brought her here, but from her incoherent words we know that they tortured her brutally.

She kept vehemently saying, "no, no."

Just what she was denying, none of us could tell. She kept babbling also of her love for me and for the babies.

I burned your letter, dear Karl, immediately after reading it. I did not even show it to Jack. I thought neither you nor mother would want what you had found out about Zoe and her error on some one else. The circumstances. Her sins, her sorrows and mistakes have all been buried with her.

I am glad mother is feeling and looking so well. If she had an own son, Karl, he could not be kinder to her than you. For this I shall be ever grateful to you.

Will write you a longer letter soon. Today I just want to forget all the things of the last sensational month.

I believe I told you that one of the men got away. His confederates insist that he double-crossed them and that he has the pearls. They vow all sorts of vengeance on him if they ever get out of prison.

We are all well and as soon as we get settled back into our humdrum life again, I think we will be very happy.

Kiss mother for me, Karl,

Your living sister,

Leslie.

Letter From Mamie Keeler to John Alden Prescott

A woman is privileged to change her mind, my dear Jack. You will remember that I told you that I would never write you again. But upon picking up the paper today and seeing that account of your house being burglarized and your wife's jewels being stolen, I could not resist telling you that I am wearing a gorgeous string of pearls given to me by my husband—an Englishman of wealth and position.

I have come to the conclusion, Jack, that a woman is not necessarily damned any more than a man because of a mistaken youth.

I am very happy. My husband loves me. I am making him a good wife, for I love him. And because I love him I am not going to tell you whom I have married. I hope we will never meet until we both have forgotten each other completely.

Now I still remember.

Mamie Keeler.

TOMORROW—Letter from Sally Atherton to Leslie Prescott.

Is Today Your Birth Anniversary?

FRIDAY, JUNE 26—The greatest fault of persons born this day is that they are almost constantly trying to shove the blame for their own faults upon someone else. They lack the ability to look into their own minds, see their weaknesses and try to correct them. They generally are nervous and quite erratic.

Summerlee was sitting up and stuffing some tobacco into his old briar.

"We've got to see them safe," said he. "You've pulled us all out of the jaws of death. My word! it was a good bit of work!"

"Admirable!" cried Challenger. "Not only we as individuals, but European science collectively, owe you a deep debt of gratitude for what you have done. I do not hesitate to say that the disappearance of Professor Summerlee and myself would have left an appreciable gap in modern zoological history. Our young friend here and you have done most excellently well."

He beamed at us with the old paternal smile, but European science would have been somewhat amazed could they have seen their chosen child, the hope of the future, with his tangled, unkempt hair, his bare chest, and his tattered clothes. He had one of the meat-tins between his knees, and sat with a large piece of cold Australian mutton between his fingers. The Indian looked up at him, and then, with a little yelp, cringed to the ground and clung to Lord John's leg.

"Don't you be scared, my bonnie boy," said Lord John, patting the matted head in front of him. "He can't stick your appearance, Challenger; and, by George! I don't wonder. All right, little chap, he's only a human, just the same as the rest of us."

"Really, sir!" cried the Professor.

"Well, it's lucky for you, Challenger, that you are a little out of the ordinary. If you hadn't been so like the king—"

"Upon my word, Lord John, you allow yourself great latitude."

"Well, it's a fact."

"I beg, sir, that you will change the subject. Your remarks are irrelevant and unintelligible. The question before us is what are we to do with these Indians? The obvious thing is to escort them home, if we know where their home was."

"There is no difficulty about that," said I. "They live in the caves on the other side of the central lake."

"Our young friend here knows where they live. I gather that it is some distance."

"A good twenty miles," said I.

Summerlee gave a groan.

"I, for one, could never get there. Surely I hear those brutes still howling upon our track."

As he spoke, from the dark recesses of the woods we heard far away the fibbering cry of the apemen. The Indians once more set up a feeble wail of fear.

"We must move, and move quick!" said Lord John. "You help Summerlee, young fellow."

The Professor ... proceeded to lecture upon him as if he were a potted specimen in a class-room.

These Indians will carry stores. Now, then, come along before they can see us."

In less than half an hour we had reached our brushwood retreat and concealed ourselves. All day we heard the excited calling of the apemen in the direction of our old camp, but none of them came our way, and the tired fugitives, red and white, had a long, deep sleep. I was dozing myself in the evening when someone plucked my sleeve, and I found Challenger kneeling beside me.

"You keep a diary of these events, and you expect eventually to publish it, Mr. Malone," said he, with solemnity.

"I am only here as a Press reporter," I answered.

"Exactly. You may have heard some rather fatuous remarks of Lord John Roxton's which seemed to imply that there was some resemblance—"

"Yes, I heard them."

"I need not say that any publicity given to such an idea—any levity in your narrative of what occurred—would be exceedingly offensive to me."

"I will keep well within the truth."

"Lord John's observations are frequently exceedingly fanciful, and he is capable of attributing the most absurd reasons to the respect which is always shown by the most undeveloped races to dignity and character. You follow my meaning?"

"Entirely."

"I leave the matter to your discretion." Then, after a long pause, he added: "The king of the apemen was really a creature of great distinction—a most remarkably handsome and intelligent personality. Did it not strike you?"

"A most remarkable creature," said I.

And the Professor, much eased in his mind, settled down to his slumber once more.

CHAPTER XIV

"Those Were the Real Conquests"

We had imagined that our pursuers, the apemen, knew nothing of our brushwood hiding-place, but we were soon to find out our mistake. There was no sound in the woods—not a leaf moved upon the trees, and all was peace around us—but we should have been warned by our first experience how cunningly and how patiently these creatures can watch and wait until their chance comes. Whatever fate may be mine through life, I am very sure that I shall never be nearer death than I was that morning. But I will tell you the thing in its due order.

We all awoke exhausted after the terrific emotions and scanty food of yesterday. Summerlee was still so weak that it was an effort for him to stand; but the old man was full of a sort of surly courage which would never admit defeat. A council was held, and it was agreed that we should wait quietly for an hour or two where we were, have our much-needed breakfast, and then make our way across the plateau and round the central lake to the caves where my observations had shown that the Indians lived. We relied upon the fact that we could count upon the good word of those whom we had rescued to ensure a warm welcome from their fellows. Then, with our mission accomplished and possessing a fuller knowledge of the secrets of Maple White Land, we should turn our whole thoughts to the vital problem of our escape and return. Even Challenger was ready to admit that we should then have done all for which we had come, and that our first duty from that time onwards was to carry back to civilization the amazing discoveries we had made.

We were able now to take a more leisurely view of the Indians whom we had rescued. They were small men, wiry, active and well-built, with lank black hair tied up in a bunch behind their heads with a leathern thong, and leathern also were their loin-clothes. Their faces were hairless, well-formed, and good-humored. The lobes of their ears, hanging ragged and bloody, showed that they had been pierced for some ornaments which their captors had torn out. Their speech, though unintelligible to us, was fluent among themselves, and as they pointed to each other and uttered the word "Aecala" many times over, we gathered that this was the name of the nation. Occasionally, with faces which were convulsed with fear and hatred, they shook their clenched hands at the woods round and cried "Doda! Doda!" which was surely their term for their enemies.

"What do you make of them, Challenger?" asked Lord John. "One thing is very clear to me, and that is that the little chap with the front of his head shaved is a chief among them."

It was indeed evident that this man stood apart from the others, and that they never ventured to address him without every sign of deep respect. He seemed to be the youngest of them all, and yet, so proud and high was his spirit that, upon Challenger laying his great hand upon his head, he started like a spurred horse and, with a quick flash of his dark eyes, moved further away from the Professor. Then, placing his hand upon his breast and holding himself with great dignity, he uttered the word "Maretas" several times. The Professor, unabashed, seized the nearest Indian by the shoulder and proceeded to lecture upon him as if he were a potted specimen in a class-room.

"The type of these people," said he in his sonorous fashion, "whether judged by cranial capacity, facial angle, or any other test, cannot be regarded as a low one; on the contrary, we must place it as considerably higher in the scale than many South American tribes which I can mention. On no possible supposition can we explain the evolution of such a race in this place. For that matter, so great a gap separates these apemen from the primitive animals which have survived upon this plateau, that it is inadmissible to think that they could have developed where we find them."

The FLAPPER WIFE

by Beatrice Burton © 1925 NEA SERVICE INC.

THE STORY SO FAR:

GLORIA GORDON, beautiful flapper, marries DICK GREGORY, a struggling lawyer. Her idea of marriage is fun and fine clothes . . . but no work or children.

She refuses to do her own housework, and hires a maid. But Dick has to let the maid go. Gloria has swamped him with debts for her parties and clothes. She becomes infatuated with an out-of-work actor, STANLEY WAYBURN, and follows him to New York. But he spurns her. Then she tries to get a job as a chorus girl and fails. Discouraged, she comes home to Dick. He takes her back, but not as his wife.

Gloria begins to suspect that he is in love with his secretary, SUSAN BRIGGS. At last she learns from Miss Briggs a confession that she is in love with Dick, and insists that Dick discharge her. When he refuses she goes home to her mother, realizing too late that Dick is the man she loves.

Dick puts his house up for sale and goes home to live with his father and mother. He sends Gloria $50 weekly, but she sends it back to him and goes to work. Her employer makes love to her and she resigns her position. She can't screw up her courage to go out to look for another job. Homesick and lonely for Dick, she sets the key of their house from Miss Briggs and goes there to spend the night. She can't bear to stay at her mother's for another night. Dick learns from Miss Briggs that Gloria has gone home.

(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY)

GLORIA darkened the house, turned the key in her bedroom door and lay down to try to go to sleep.

But it wasn't the kind of night for sleep. A ray of moonlight lay like a slim beckoning finger on the wall beside the bed. The darkness seemed to be filled with an expectant hush.

There was a high excitement in Gloria. She swung her naked feet over the side of the bed and crossed the room to the window. A large white moon hung low in the sky like a Japanese lantern. It turned the fluttering leaves of the poplar trees to silver spangles.

The world outside seemed unreal—disturbing in its beauty, but the lonely woman at the window hardened her heart against its magic. She had a feeling that the only way for her to go on was to harden her heart against everything—not only against things, but against people—against Dick. She must never let the thought of him into her heart again, she told herself with a kind of dull anger. And then she went on thinking about him.

Somewhere out there in the breathing night, he was.

And suddenly Gloria remembered another night when she had stood at another window and wondered where Dick was. That had been long ago—on the night before she had married him. She remembered how he had driven up in the middle of the night and whistled softly in the darkness for her—a low "Bob White" whistle. He had begged her to come down stairs for just a second to kiss him—and she had refused.

"What a fool I was!" she told herself, "and how glad I'd be now if he wanted to kiss me! How glad I'd be . . . But there's no chance of that ever again."

The tears that she had felt in her eyes all day—and in her heart—overflowed. She dropped to her knees on the floor and laid her head down on the window sill and sobbed.

And then she seemed to hear a low whistle—a long, clear note followed by a shorter one. She held her breath and listened. . . . Was it Dick's "Bob White" call?

Oh, no; it couldn't be. . . . And then it came again!

Gloria raised her head. Down on the lawn in the shadow of the trees was a darker shadow. It detached itself and moved out into the moon light. It was Dick!

Gloria's heart leaped in her breast. "Dick!" she said. And there was a note of relief and sudden happiness in her voice.

"Come down and open the door," he said.

Without stopping to put on her kimono or slippers, Gloria ran across the room and down through the darkened house where the moonlight lay in patches here and there on the walls and floor.

She unlocked the door and pattered out onto the porch. She stood there in the mingled radiance of the distant moon and a street lamp just in front of the house. . . . Some passing neighbors stopped to stare as she threw herself into Dick's arms. But neither she nor Dick saw them. For they in that moment were oblivious to all the world—except themselves.

She had a feeling that the only way for her to go on was to harden her heart against everything—not only against things, but against people—against Dick. She must never let the thought of him into her heart again, she told herself with a kind of dull anger. And then she went on thinking about him.

break . . . Is that it?" she asked. "The most deadly dull of all things . . . a habit!"

Dick shook his head. "No," he said. "It strikes deeper than that. You're my woman. There are a lot of men who can love a score of women in their time, but I'm not one of them. I'm the kind of a fool who can never care for more than one woman, I suppose."

"And am I that one woman for you?" Gloria asked. Her eyes were wide and eager. "Are you sure?"

Dick looked at her. His mouth tightened as he took her into the hard ring of his arms. "You are," he answered, and his voice was thick and tense.

Gloria leaned back in his arms and looked at him. "Then I won't be jealous of Susan Briggs any more and I'll stop heckling you about her," she said.

Dick waited a moment before he answered. "I've an idea that Susan Briggs stopped working for me to night," he said then abruptly. "I don't know what makes me think so, but I do, somehow."

Gloria laughed. "She'll be right there when you get to the office tomorrow morning, just as usual," she cried. "Unless she knows you've come back to me!"

"I think she does know it," Dick's voice was grave, "but don't worry about her. You know I never cared about Susan Briggs, don't you?" He put his hands under her elbows and held her away from him.

"And I never cared about Stan Wayburn, either!" Gloria broke in shrilly. "I've thought it all out, Dick, these last two weeks. He was just a part of jazz to me, like cock-tails and dance music. I was hunting for a thrill and he gave it to me."

Her small face with its uplifted lips hovered as she went on. "He told me all the things I wanted to hear from you . . . how beautiful I was and how I could knock him off his pins. Oh, Dick, we've come good, haven't we?"

Dick laid his hand over her mouth. "All right, all right," he said impatiently. "And that about ends Stanley Wayburn and Susan Briggs for good, doesn't it? . . . What I want to know just now is whether you're going to be contented with me from now on?"

"Contented? I'm going to be happy!"

"And she is the same woman everywhere, whether you find her in an arctic in an Eskimo village or in many-towered Manhattan . . . or in the romantic islands of the southern seas."

THE END.

Those Gay Hoes

Nothing has so re-freshed, re-energized and reconstructed men's fashions lately as the introduction of bold color in almost every accessory, from hat right down to hose. When a man grows old, then the women say that his mispent youth must have been too gay; and they look askance, with many a frown, at the warning top of his shiny crown—and he begins to worry more about his appearance. In this country, unlike abroad, we have no separate styles for men in their teens, twenties, thirties and forties as distinguished from men in fifties and sixties. That is because the American matures, but doesn't grow old and, because, as a rule, he is clean-shaven. So don't be afraid of dressing in a light, bright, happy, snappy, young-chappy way. Don't fight shy of color—apply it. Remember that the taste and character of the wearer cannot be interpreted to any appreciable degree in the style of his clothes, for styles are as alike as many beads threaded upon a single string. However, a man's choice of colors is individually and intimately his own. They are dictated wholly by personal fancy.

Hosiery in the new bright colors and patterns should not call attention to a man's foot, but to his taste. The difference is as deep as a well and as wide as a church door. Mere boldness of color is not good style.

New York—They call New York the "Jazz Capital" of the world. Perhaps! But the other night I was walking along Christopher street in Greenwich Village. It was one of the hot, humid nights of the recent heat wave. From above, below and all about projected the silhouetted figures of people trying to gasp their portion of air from fire escapes, roofs, porches, cellars and sidewalks.

Suddenly I heard the scraping and hawking of an old-time fiddler, wheezing out the notes of "Old Dan Tucker." The heat, of course! It was playing tricks; bringing incongruous associations with days long past. No! There it was again. And a crowd upon the street, pressing its noses close to a pane of glass.

Above their heads swung a great wooden horseshoe, long the symbol of the "village smithy" (yes, they still have blacksmiths in New York, even if they have vanished from Main street.

And here, upon a sweltering hot night, in the very heart of the so-called "ultra-modern" and "sophisticated" village, a little group of lads and maids were tripping the steps of the barn dance in Ted Robinson's blacksmith shop. What is more, they knew their steps—they knew the steps of the Irish reels and the Virginia reels and the square dances.

Lads and lasses from the farm belts of everywhere, met accidentally upon a sweltering night and forgetting the heat and their loneliness in a return to the old barn dance.

I recognized the fiddler as a musician who charges from $7 an hour up for lessons and three of the dancers, I noticed, were students of one of the ultra-modern schools of design.

The ambition of almost every chorus girl, and, for that matter, every stage-struck girl, is to be accepted for a place in the Follies. The other day two young married women reported at the Ziegfeld office when try-outs were being given. They were told to go through various simple dance steps and asked to walk across the stage several times. Both were accepted for rehearsals. Neither desired a position in the try-out just to see if they would be accepted. And while they were being accepted dozens of disappointed aspirants were being rejected. This is not a press-agent yarn. I know the two girls.

Many employers here allow their help to take afternoons off during the hot spell to seek relief from the scorching sun. This generally results in the employees being unable to report for work the next day or for several days after because of acute sunburn. Those who suffer most from sunburn are folks from the hinterland who do not realize that salt water and salt air make the skin more susceptible to the sun's rays than the water in the old swimming hole.
